

ABSTRACT

A method for emulating a processor of a first endian type on a processor of a second endian type, wherein each memory access address B of string length L is transformed to the address $A-B-L+S$, wherein A is the total number of bytes allocated to a program, and S is the start address of the program.